Fundamental to our vision, Rotaplast is one of a few humanitarian medical organizations where surgical teams and non-medical volunteers work side-by-side. As in any hospital or business place, standards of professional conduct expected at home apply when abroad regardless of the team position. Missions are not for casual travelers. Rotaplast's reputation is built on the professional conduct and safety of our teams. If your plan is to sightsee, party, vacation and relax, a Mission experience is not for you. While we try to make you as comfortable as possible, you can expect long work hours; physical exhaustion; basic lodging (sometimes dormitories/ barracks); a wide variety of local customs and food, and few amenities. As a Rotaplast volunteer you commit to: work hard, behave professionally and to act as a diplomat during the entire Mission. You can also expect one of the most affirming experiences of your life.

Each year we have a finite supply of spaces and we place a high value on our volunteer positions. As a mission volunteer, we ask you to support our work on site and once you return as part of our Alumni. Once assigned, you become a representative of Rotaplast, your country and your profession. We ask you to approach volunteering with us as seriously as we take our mission to provide the highest quality medical services to children in need around the world.
